

The Dr. William D. Young Memorial Drinking Fountain in Kew Gardens, Toronto.

It was erected in 1920 through public subscription to symbolize the philanthropic service of a distinguished doctor in the Beaches District in the days before universal health care. He devoted himself to the health and welfare of children in the neighbourhood and died after being stricken with the flu while tending the sick during the flu pandemic.

